

Here are some points that you need to consider. You should have included these in your reflective activity.

- This is not the right decision. The right thing to do now would be to contact Chelsea, ask to meet her and support her complaint. Your lack of action so far has made the situation worse and now a formal grievance has been lodged.
- You made a mistake when you had an informal chat with Brenda to tell her about Chelsea's complaint. It looked like you were protecting Brenda and giving her more favourable treatment. This breached Chelsea's trust and you have placed her wellbeing at risk. Again you are consulting Brenda and avoiding using the correct procedure to deal with the complaint. If there is an investigation and your actions are discovered it could call into question your suitability to be a social service manager.
- When you did not treat Chelsea's original complaint seriously you were not meeting the standards expected of a social service manager. The SSSC Code of Practice for Social Service Workers says you must make it clear bullying is not acceptable. It is your duty to take action to deal with such behaviour.
- You need a better understanding of procedures that enable workers to report bullying behaviour. You also need to know how to promote these more actively. In future you must deal with reports promptly, effectively and openly.
- Not doing the right thing promptly could undermine confidence in your organisation's capacity to promote rights. It also led to the situation getting worse. You need to demonstrate through your actions that you are trustworthy, reliable and dependable.
- You need to do more learning to develop a better understanding of how power relationships can be used and abused. You also need to learn about the impact of stress and conflict on organisational performance and retention of staff.
- You need to strengthen your commitment to communicating with your team openly and to promoting the wellbeing of all workers. Your employer can help you to identify your training needs and to meet them.

When Chelsea reported her complaint the right thing to do was to treat it seriously, make enquiries to establish the facts and if appropriate support Chelsea to make a formal complaint in line with your organisation's complaints procedures.
