

Here are some points that you need to consider. You should have included all of these in your reflective activity.

- Telling your manager you have not yet managed to follow up the referral is the right thing to do. This situation requires immediate attention and you must take responsibility for making sure it is addressed.
- When someone reports that a child you are working with may be in need of protection, it is your responsibility to carry out enquiries and make recommendations as to whether or not the child should be the subject of compulsory protection measures. This situation needs to be prioritised and you should organise your workload accordingly.
- You should use your social work skills to intervene early. By doing this you could prevent risk factors developing into crises. You need to appreciate this is one of the important contributions social workers make towards achieving better outcomes for individuals, families and communities.
- A skilled social worker takes responsibility for making decisions, understands that these can have far-reaching significance and is accountable for the exercise of statutory interventions. All social service workers must be able to explain and account for their practice.
- You must act in a way that demonstrates you are trustworthy and reliable. It is through your actions you earn the trust of colleagues, people using services and the public. You are now doing the right thing. Had you not made the right choice at this stage, you could have lost the trust of your colleagues and the wider community.
- You must recognise the power that comes from your work with people using services and the community and use this responsibly. You need to communicate with colleagues in an appropriate, open, accurate and straightforward way. You have now shown you can do this but in future you need to act sooner.
- It would be useful for you to revisit the SSSC Code of Practice for Social Service Workers, Scottish Government Guidance on the Role of the Registered Social Worker in Statutory Interventions, and the National Guidance for Child Protection in Scotland 2014. You must understand and comply with these in all aspects of your work.
- Had you not done the right thing it could have called into question your suitability to be a social worker. An investigation by your employer or the SSSC may have resulted in disciplinary action and even losing your eligibility to remain on the SSSC register.

When you learned a neighbour of a family you are working with called to report her concerns, the right thing to do was immediately tell your manager and initiate child protection proceedings in line with your employer's policies.
